Proceeds will fund ongoing buildout of world-class growth project at Leer South
Transaction is nearly eight times oversubscribed
Results in a highly competitive interest rate of 4.125 percent

ST. LOUIS, March 4, 2021 /PRNewswire/ -- Arch Resources, Inc. (NYSE: ARCH) announced today that it has issued $45.0 million of bonds in the U.S. tax-exempt market through the West Virginia Economic Development Authority, as a follow-on to its $53.1 million offering in July 2020. The bonds are subject to a mandatory tender for purchase by the company on July 1, 2025. The proceeds will be used to fund a portion of the ongoing construction of the world-class Leer South mine in Barbour County, West Virginia, which is expected to commence longwall production in the third quarter of 2021.

"We are grateful for the market's strong expression of confidence in Arch, and for its ongoing support of our long-term plans for value creation and growth," said Matthew C. Giljum, Arch's chief financial officer. "The proceeds from this advantageously priced bond offering will further bolster our liquidity and support the continuing build-out of our transformational Leer South growth project, which is advancing rapidly and nearing completion."

The transaction was nearly eight times oversubscribed, resulting in a highly competitive fixed interest rate of 4.125 percent. Arch Resources is the primary obligor on the secured bonds, with substantially all of its significant subsidiaries acting as guarantors.

In keeping with the requirements of the tax-exempt issuance, proceeds from the offering will be used to fund the ongoing construction of the mine's preparation plant and other facilities associated with waste management. Arch expects to receive the cash from the offering over the next six months or so, as qualified work is completed.

"We also wish to extend our thanks for the continuing vision and support of Governor Jim Justice and the West Virginia Economic Development Authority, who played an instrumental role in facilitating this successful issuance as well as its predecessor transaction," Giljum said. "We look forward to a strong, continuing partnership with the state of West Virginia as mine development ends and longwall production begins, and expect Leer South to serve as a cornerstone of the northern West Virginia economy for the next 20 years or more – providing permanent, well-paying jobs to more than 500 West Virginians and supporting countless other regional businesses and their employees as well."

The total development cost for Leer South is expected to be at the upper end of the originally projected range of $360 million to $390 million, representing one of the largest investments in the State of West Virginia in recent years. The mine development process is currently supporting an estimated 1,800 temporary jobs related to the construction of facilities and infrastructure, the sourcing of equipment, and the provision of critical services.

Leer South is expected to produce up to four million tons of coking coal annually for sale into global metallurgical markets. Coking coal – in combination with iron ore – is an essential component in the manufacture of primary steel. Arch expects steel to play an indispensable role in the revitalization of the global economy as it recovers from the disruption of the COVID-19 pandemic, and in the construction of a new economy supported by mass transit systems, wind turbines and electric vehicles.

Leer South remains on schedule and on budget, and – once completed – is expected to operate in tandem with Arch's existing Leer mine in Taylor County for the next two decades or more. With the startup of Leer South, Arch expects to employ a total of 1,700 West Virginians at its four metallurgical mines in the state.
